Email: francis@africanperspectives.co.za
Website: www.africanperspectives.co.za

African Perspectives seeks to unleash wisdom. Through the midwifery of ideas and visions, we seek to engage in a critique of and resistance to the callous indifference of the mind, soul and therefore society to the very value of dialogue. Not the narrow ranting of the plutocracy in a market driven economy, but a Socratic commitment to questioning - of ourselves, of authority, of dogma, of parochialism and fundamentalism. We at African Perspectives seek to inspire through distributing thought on the broader issues of the democratic question. Our ability to define the variables rather than dismissing them as anomalies must be discussed. Not only in the corridors of power, but in the streets of every African town, city and village.

Email: challsupport@mweb.co.za

Website: www.challsupport.co.za

While cancer moves from epidemic to pandemic proportions most people only talk about it when someone they know has it. The diagnosis within the family has a ripple effect and can lead to devastating consequences through ignorance of the side effects of treatment. From a holistic perspective, each person's mind, body and spirit are in constant infection. The author shares evidence accumulated from 5 years of his own cancer, then after the all clear, completing a masters programme in psychology and an internship with a cancer doctor, he worked as their in-house physiologist at 3 different clinics for 5 years. Being prepared removes the fear of the unknowns and small support groups (for patients, family). The book seeks to help individuals manage the moment to moment, daily living with cancer, and written for everyone because we are all vulnerable to it.

Email: keleketla@gmail.com

Website: www.thefanpalproject.co.za

Keleketla! is a Pedi word which is a response to the beginning of a story, something that you say back to the storyteller's 'once upon a time'. It has no direct English translation, but represents a form of acknowledgement and a consent that 'I am here, willing to listen to your story with active participation'.

The Keleketla! initiative is a collection of projects that share a concern with the creation of stories through a variety of modes and media, based on a dynamic and fluid interaction between audience and story-teller – through the spoken word, music, artmaking, film, performance, writing, reading and so on. Located at the Drill Hall, a redeveloped heritage site in the Joubert Park area of the inner city, the projects involve the active participation of local people and a range of age groups.

The project originally developed out of the idea of a library that would serve as a home for a variety of creative activities. The project has now grown to include a variety of elements

The Goethe-Institut is the cultural institute of the Federal Republic of Germany. We promote knowledge of the German language abroad and foster international cultural cooperation. We also convey a comprehensive picture of Germany by providing information on Germany's cultural, social and political life.

Due to South Africa's history of racial discrimination our focus here is particularly on the development of and involvement with previously disadvantaged groups of the population. Thus, seminars and workshops are in the limelight of our program. Our library offers a wide variety of print and audiovisual material on different Germany-related topics. The books and media (including CDs and DVDs) cover cultural and social interests as well as German literature and material to learn and practice German. Most of our DVDs have English subtitles and we offer English books to cater for the non-German speaking clients, interested in German literature, arts and culture.

Room to Read seeks to transform the lives of millions of children in developing countries by focusing on literacy and gender equality in education. Working in collaboration with local communities, partners, organisations and governments, we develop literacy skills and a habit of reading among primary school children. We also support girls to complete secondary school with the relevant life skills to succeed in school and beyond.

We are an Independent Publisher dedicated to making reading more socially accepted and available by introducing different ways of engaging the youth as well as adults in specific communities. We do this by creating a mainstream youth culture with products today's youth can relate to e.g. cell phones and the internet without straying too far from the sentimentality of the actual book, offering an alternative, innovative ways of publishing, developing tangible relationships with communities, schools and other institutions where books are not readily available, documenting our South African, organizing events to showcase the different works of authors or artists and creating platforms for performing artists to bring their written work to life together with art exhibitions and live music in different venues.

We create lasting relationships with our authors to establish a level of trust and think of them as siblings. Working with different art forms e.g. spoken word, visual art, music, film, dance, etc., we utilize different mediums, forming a tangible, commercial product retailed to make a profit, and showcasing the freshest established and emerging artists, creating a standard of quality synonymous with the reunitedsiblings brand.

In 2006, driven by the need to create a collective space through which women could share their stories of surviving gender based violence, we set up the Writing Programme, and invited women throughout the country to send us their short stories, poems and personal essays that told stories of survival. Since its inception there have been five Breaking the Silence anthologies published:

Dreaming of living; Positive Living Gender; Murmurs of the girl in me; Journeys to recovery; and Stories from the other(ed) woman.

The Sol Plaatje Educational Trust was established in 1991 and operates from the house at 31 Angel Street, Kimberley, where Sol T Plaatje, pioneering author and founder member of the ANC, lived at the time of his death in 1932. From the inception of the Trust, the Trustees believed that the house and the projects emanating from it should reflect the legacy of Plaatje in a direct or symbolic manner. Since then a relevant museum area was established in the front rooms of the house together with a reference library in the central part of the house. Since the launch of a publications programme in 2002 the main aim is to produce new knowledge and to add value to oral histories, indigenous language development and Plaatje's own contribution in the fields of journalism, indigenous, literature, and historical writings.

WEAVER PRESS

38 Broadlands Road, Emerland Road, Harare, Zimbabwe

PO Box A1922, Avonale, Harare, Zimbabwe

Tel: 263 913 389 590

Email: weaver@mweb.co.za

WEAVER PRESS was formed in 1998. A founding commitment of the company is to ensure that the results of research, scholarship and creative writing are made available in their region of origin and not only in foreign markets. The Company's list focuses on political and social history, the environment, media issues, and women's and children's rights. A fiction imprint was launched in 2002.

The state of the Zimbabwean economy has demanded an innovative approach to publishing. Where possible, production subsidies are obtained to allow books to be sold at affordable prices through the retail trade. Grants are also sometimes used to underwrite the free distribution of books to libraries.

Weaver Press is a small company, employing only a publishing assistant apart from the two owner-directors, and operates from premises at the directors' home. By keeping overheads low, and by employing a judicious mix of co-publishing arrangements, donor partnerships and links with academic and creative writing communities, it has established a modest niche in Zimbabwe's publishing sector.
